

Little Things Do Make Huge Differences

On one sunny Sunday morning a man was taking a casual walk on the sandy beach. He was just busy singing songs while walking. Suddenly he saw hundreds of starfish got dragged with the tide water and all were left aside on the sandy beach as the tide receded. All of them were supposed to die as without water and rising sun's rays' heat. He stood for a while and after thinking for few minutes suddenly ran to the shore and started picking up starfishes one by one and was throwing them back into the sea water. He just kept doing repeatedly for sake of saving them.

Another walker passing by curiously was observing him, came to him and with sort of cunning laugh told him " Hey man , what are you doing is not going to make sense as hundreds of fishes are still lying on the seashore waiting to die. What difference is it going to make after all?

First man smiled a bit and again went to the shore, picked up another starfish and threw back it into the seawaters. He kept on repeating the same and after saving the sixth fish, he returned back to the man who questioned him. He replied with smile "At least, I have made difference to few fishes, if not all." And he returned back again to the seashore and started saving starfishes.

Everyone thinks only on what difference are we making? One should not bother about the result but should concern only on what difference he or she is making.

Big or small, it doesn't matter. If together we can make a small difference it eventually may turn out into a huge difference, who knows?
