Many of us know Socrates a famous Greek Philosopher, who was credited as one of the western philosophy.

Once a young man asked the Socrates 'what is the secret to the success?' Socrates told him to meet at lake next day morning. The young man reached at the place on time and he saw Socrates waiting there for him. Socrates told him to walk along with him towards the water.

They entered into water slowly walking, soon the water level crossed knee and then it rose up to waist level. The man was wondering but Socrates told him to keep a trust and be confident. Soon the water level rose up to neck and the young man was bit scared. Suddenly Socrates took the young man by surprise and ducked him into the water with holding his head into the water. The young man struggled to take his head out for breathing air but Socrates was holding him strongly and did not let him come out of the water. As the man started turning blue he applied more strong efforts and lastly he could take his head out water and breathe air.

Both came out of water and while resting Socrates asked the young man what he wanted the most when he was under water? Man replied 'Only Air.' Socrates smiled and said " That was the secret of the success , what you wanted badly you tried everything to get it and finally you got it !"
